

R3 Need Finding (Design Problem)

It comes into surprise when I was assigned as a group leader, because I was building myself towards that skill. I'm within a group with Mr. Cervantes and Ms. Tolentino, which I've never foresee since we're all not close — and I think that's the point of groupings. Somebody told me that Ms. Tolentino needs assistance on academic things because I think she's not that close to everyone, while Mr. Cervantes is an irregular though we've been into classes with him, I think there would never be a chance that he can become close acquaintances because he is working student as well. We may gather the group randomly, though I'm not close with both of them, but we still manage to reach people's expectation and able to do deliverables.

Ms. Tolentino did spectacular on persona, pain points, experience maps, and quotes. Though I haven't instructed them yet, she took initiative to revise and tweak the presentation we first presented, and we keep the iteration going. Mr. Cervantes is a visionary as we aligned each other perspective by reading the proposal and properly see the solution we've been trying to accomplish and problem we are trying to solve and immediately pointed related quotes, answering on the question 'How Might We?' and emphasizes relevance on the solution.

During the midterm's presentation, I think our group did well. Each member of the group did their part accordingly and we managed to pile it up successfully. I'm glad I didn't settle on my comfort zone and now, I am able to meet various people on this group work and know the capacity of everyone that not everyone has noticed.